Notes to Financial Statements of Jean Group (Continued)

(3) For long-term loans, the fair value is evaluated based on the discounted value of the expected cash flow. The discount rate is subject to long-term borrowing rates of similar conditions that are available to the Company.

(4) Most of guarantee deposits paid and received are paid and received in cash; therefore, the fair value should be equal to the book value.

2. Financial risk information(1) Market risks

The Company's value fluctuation risks that will be incurred to foreign currency deposits, accounts receivable, accounts payable and short-term loans by foreign exchange rate movements.

(2) Credit risks

The Company's major potential credit risks are from the financial commodities of notes receivable and accounts receivable. In order to reduce credit risks, the Company carries out sustained evaluation on customers' financial position and adjusts line of credit offered to them as appropriate. In addition, the Company also regularly evaluates the possibility of recovering accounts receivable and makes provision for allowance for bad debts when necessary. Up to Dec. 31, 2008 and Dec. 31, 2007, 56% and 83% of balance of notes receivable and accounts receivable was respectively constituted by the top five trade debtors of the Company, which makes the credit risks of notes receivable and accounts receivable centralized.

(3) Liquidity risks, cash flow risks, and uncertainty of future cash demands

The Company kept appropriate working capital and bank credit not tapped to cope with situations both in 2008 and 2007, so as to avoid the liquidity risk of not being able to raise funds to fulfill contractual obligations.

(4) Cash flow risks of interest rate changes

The Company's short-term and long-term loans are floating-rate debts. Therefore, the changes of market interest rate will make the short-term and long-term loans fluctuate along with the changes, leading to the fluctuation of future cash flow.
